

Letter to self

1.1.4

Now take some time to reflect on the dilemmas you looked at. Pick three that you could relate to most. Write a letter to yourself in which you list these three dilemmas and how you would have decided.

In your letter also think about what you know about Frankenstein, what you expect will happen in the novel and what you feel about having to read this novel. The prompts in the box might help you. Put the letter in an envelope and seal it. Write your name on the outside and/or draw something you will recognise as your own in a few weeks' time. Then hand your letter in to your teacher, who will return it to you in a few weeks.

Prompts: the three dilemmas I could relate to most were ... • I would have made the following choices • what I know about the novel ... • I feel bored / worried / excited / about reading Frankenstein, because ... • I hope that... • I'm looking forward to ... • I worry about...

Dear Liam

I've chosen the four dilemmas you can see on the sheet of paper two before this one.

I can relate the most to the one with the broken ornament because as you may remember we broke the small purple plate and we didn't know what to do.

What I know or more likely we know is that Frankenstein was written as part of an ... Writing tournament Mary Shelly participated in. I'm actually pretty excited about reading this novel because our dad told us a few interesting things about the novel and the history behind it.

I do am worried about reading it in school because it'll be a lot of interpretation and analysis.

I hope you get through it as well as I think you will!

Best from your younger self,

Liam
